DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

1. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(e) the invention was described in (1) an application for patent, published under section 122(b), by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent or (2) a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a) shall have the effects for purposes of this subsection of an application filed in the United States only if the international application designated the United States and was published under Article 21(2) of such treaty in the English language.

2. Claims 1-9, and 11 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Alexandropoulos (2004/0164615). Alexandropoulos teaches a door unlocking method for an automobile that has a sensing circuit (116) that detects when the door handle is being lifted (shaking movements). He also teaches defining a plurality of predetermined time periods (3 sec.) and a plurality of predetermined count values corresponding to the time periods. He also teaches a control circuit (128), coupled to the sensing circuit and the interior door lock (112), which unlocks an automobile door when the detected shaking movements with the corresponding time periods match the predetermined count values, and maintaining the doors locked if they don't match. He also teaches after unlocking has occurred, locking the door if the door isn't opened within a delay time period (Fig. 5C). The control circuit includes a timer and counter for the time periods and count values, respectively. The sensing circuit generates a voltage signal, as a digital pulse, for each detected shaking movement (near end of [0036]). (Figs. 1, 4, 5; [0034

3. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

Art Unit: 2836

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

4. Claims 10 and 12 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Alexandropoulos (2004/0164615). Alexandropoulos teaches a door unlocking method as described above. He doesn't explicitly teach first and second count values being three and five, respectively. However, choosing the values of three and five instead of two and one, which was taught in the prior art is clearly a marketing choice. The prior art just gave those values as an arbitrary example, but could have used any number of values (i.e. three and five). The count values being three and five show no marked improvement over the prior art, therefore it would have been obvious to use any number as the count value, namely three and five. See MPEP 716.02.
